THE MANY FACES of Charles Manson as he has appeared at various times during the Sharon Tate murder trial in Los Angeles (where he and his three girl co-defendants were convicted of the grisly slaughter): From left, the beginning, Dec. 24, 1969, when the judge gave him permission to act as his own attorney; Oct. 21, 1970; Nov. 2, 1970, for the first time with hair cut and neatly combed; Dec. 17, 1970; and, finally, a week ago with swastika scratched on his forehead. The jury was still hearing testimony in the penalty phase of the trial, had last learned Manson also marked Sharon Tate's next-door neighbors for murder the same night but panic aborted the alleged "orders" to Susan Atkins, Charles Watson, Patricia Krenwinkle, Linda Kasabian, and the neighbors lived.
